

For Authors

Dialogue publishes, in English and French, articles on all topics in philosophy, including its history, from a variety of philosophical perspectives and traditions. In addition to excellence of argument the journal prizes clear well-written prose and encourages authors to edit their manuscripts with an eye to lucidity of structure and style. Authors are encouraged to present their arguments in a way which makes them as accessible as possible and to use Occam's razor when considering footnotes and references. The articles and reviews in Dialogue are double-blind, peer reviewed. Submission of a manuscript is understood to imply that the manuscript is not under consideration by any other journal and is offered to Dialogue for first publication.

Authors should use Canadian spelling throughout and use double quotes for all quotations including quotes of emphasis, except when inside other quotes. Authors will be asked at the time of submission to provide an abstract of under 200 words. Should a manuscript be accepted the author will be required to provide two short abstracts of under 100 words, one in English and one in French. At the time of acceptance the author will receive a formatting guide which specifies how to format the final manuscript in accordance with the conventions of the journal, but for the purposes of submission any common Humanities style is acceptable.
